 Found in strong box. With a fine impression of the satyirical portrait of Charles II. 8° calf (binding broken).

Printed in the year 1694

This remarkable book is a virulent satire on Charles II, written in imitation of "Eikon Basilike." It takes the form of a personal narrative by the King and details all the adventures, escapades, illegal acts, treason with the French King, plots, etc., from the time of his father's execution to that of his death. It also includes Hudleston's Account of Particulars Occurring at his Death and two papers by the King found in his strong box. So rare is the book that neither Lowndes or Hazlitt mentions its existence. The frontispiece is a parody upon that in Eikon Basilike and represents Charles praying to Nell Gwynne.

A few names underlined in ink.
Giving the names of a great proportion of the settlers previous to 1692. This work is the foundation for Genealogical research and many of our genealogists now attempt to trace all the branches of a family from its primal root here. A branch disappears and no clew points whither, but this book will probably show its locality, if in New England, and give information which otherwise would be absolutely unattainable.
